

Child, Youth, and Teen Victimization

Children, youth, and teens experience high levels of victimization, with more than half of children and adolescents experiencing some form of physical assault in their lifetime. They also experience multiple forms of violence (polyvictimization), and a large percentage are exposed to additional physical and emotional violence in their homes, schools, and neighborhoods. The effects can be cumulative and extremely damaging over time. The exposure itself increases the probability of future victimization.^B Given the amount of time this age group spends at school, victimizations in this setting constitute an important subset of crime; see the School Crime Fact Sheet for more.
